TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

This is to certify that the historical account of the First Colorado Regiment, written by ARTHUR C. JOHNSON especially for "Campaigning in the Philippines" is correct to the best of my knowledge, he having had access to official records in compiling the work.

HENRY B. MCCOY,
Colonel First Colorado Infantry, U. S. V.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL IRVING HALE
Taken near Block-house No. 5.

FIRST COLORADO INFANTRY.

THE First Regiment, Colorado Infantry, U. S. V., saw a full year of Luzon's erratic seasons. This regiment, one of the pioneers of the foreign service, landed in time to find the rainy season of 1898 at its wettest and stayed to complete the cycle of rains, roasts, typhoons, winds and even earthquakes. The "flag-raisers" at Manila joined in the opening overture of the campaign against the Spanish and followed up the peaceful situation they helped to establish with the Dons by chiming in with the chorus of Springfield volleys against the Filipinos on the night of February 4th. The back-bone of the insurrection appeared broken when they started for home.

The Colorado aggregation was one quite typical of the American volunteers. Miners forsook their picks and blasting powder in the rich caverns at Leadville and Cripple Creek; bank clerks threw down their pens; men of professions gave up practices; brawny cattlemen on the waving plains dismounted from their bronchos, and laborers relinquished their jobs—all to aid Colorado to contribute her aid in subduing arrogant Spain. The National Guard training of many of these men served them well and their healthful rearing in Colorado's climate of ozone, furnished prowess which brought the regiment through the terrors of a tropical climate comparatively unscathed. Spanish and Filipino bullets claimed a few, but the Colorado Regiment left the Philippines with the same reputation it had gained shortly after landing there—one of the ever-readies of the service. It was the regiment that Gen. Francis V. Greene termed during his active work against the Spanish before Manila, "the back-bone of my brigade."

THE REGIMENT ORGANIZED.

Colorado's allotment of volunteers for the Spanish War under the first call of the President was one regiment of infantry and two troops of cavalry. It was ruled that the National Guard of the State should have the preference over strictly private citizens. The guard of the State consisted of two partially filled regiments of infantry and three troops of cavalry.

On April 29, 1898, the entire National Guard of Colorado was mobilized at Denver and went into camp close to City Park, the spot becoming known as Camp Adams, named after Hon. Alva Adams, Governor of the State. Here the stupendous task of resolving two infantry regiments into one and three cavalry troops into two was commenced by the Adjutant-General of the State, Cassius M. Moses, Brigadier-General Irving Hale, Col. Henry B. McCoy and Col. Charles H. Anderson. The consolidation was accomplished, the officers appointed by the Governor and the entire quota mustered into the United States service by Capt. E. F. Willcox of the 6th U. S. Cav., who was designated by the War Department as mustering officer, by May 6th.

The companies of the new regiment were arranged and officered in a way to give a fair representation to each section of the State as far as possible. By doing this it was possible to have each town which had furnished its quota of guardsmen represented by at least one company of the new organization. Recruits were taken in by large numbers and assigned to companies, without much regard for anything but filling up the same with good men. Nevertheless, when the 1st

Colorado was ready for service a majority of the men in each company represented some one city. During the campaign the homes of the companies were considered as follows:

Company A, Pueblo; Company B, Denver; Company C, Pueblo; Company D, Greeley; Company E, Denver; Company F, Leadville; Company G, Cripple Creek; Company H, Boulder; Company I, Denver; Company K, Denver; Company L, Leadville; Company M, Colorado Springs.

The men all underwent a rigid examination by officers detailed from the regular service. The medical officers of the regiment also assisted in this work and it took what was considered a good healthy man and a man properly built to obtain his enlistment. Plenty of recruits were turned away as unsatisfactory and even members of the National Guard who had served in State campaigns received such close scrutiny that a few of them failed to pass. The result of this care by the examiners was that Colorado sent out a regiment perhaps the healthiest in the field and whose losses by disease did not nearly equal those of other regiments in the same branch of the campaign.

ORDERED TO THE PHILIPPINES.

Rumors of service in Cuba were rife, and, in fact, the order to move to Chica-mauga did come a few days after the organization of the troops was completed, but this was afterwards changed and the infantry ordered to San Francisco to take transports for the Philippines. The Colorado Cavalry was ordered later to Cheyenne to join Torrey's Cavalry for service in Cuba.

On the morning of the 17th of May, Camp Adams was razed and at precisely noon that newly born aggregation of fighters, headed by its regimental band and escorted by the cavalry troops, marched through the business streets of Denver to the Union Depot where four long trains waited to take the husky warriors of mountain and plain over the first stage of their lengthy journey to the field of battle. It was an auspicious day, perfect overhead and underfoot, and a vast throng of thousands sent up its huzzas, said its good-byes and wished God-speed to the men.

After a jolly trip through mountains and across desert, the four train sections bearing the 1040 enlisted men and 46 officers of the regiment swung into beautiful California and landed their passengers at Oakland on the foggy morning of May 21st. On that day Camp Hale, the Colorado part of the big military city Camp Merritt, was established.

TAKING THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE.

The hungry, travel-worn companies which marched off the Oakland ferry into San Francisco met a reception which they will never forget. The ladies of the Red Cross Society ushered them without delay to tables groaning with palatable sandwiches and delicious coffee. California flowers were showered on the surprised, but delighted men, and they were loaded down with California fruit. Far from home and among strangers, it was an ovation they were not looking for, but it was only the initial installment of the fine treatment dealt out by the big-hearted Californians to the soldier boys. All along the line of march to Camp Merritt the men received cheers and compliments which fairly dazzled them.

THE STAY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

During the entire stay in San Francisco the Red Cross Society was lavish in its attentions to the regiment.

For nearly three weeks the Sibley tents of the Colorado men were one of the big features of Camp Merritt, and scarcely a visitor cared to leave without looking on the camp-stained canvas and the men who had seen more soldier service than any volunteer organization in the encampment, having served in two State campaigns, namely, against the striking miners of Cripple Creek and Leadville. The latter campaign had been carried on in the dead of winter and in bitter cold cloud-land. Perhaps it was their record of experience which won for the Colorado men some of the best plaudits of the people of San Francisco, or perhaps it was their spectacular skirmish drills, which took place on Presidio hill every afternoon under the command of Col. Irving Hale. The Coloradans were the first to practice true war drilling for the benefit of themselves, and, incidentally, for the edification of the admirers of perfect military tactics among the San Franciscans.

The 1st Colorado Inf. had been among those chosen to leave for the Philippines on the first transport expedition, but a delay in railroad transportation lost them that place, and they were slated for the next expedition to leave after their arrival. The regiment possessed what very few of the other regiments camping in San Francisco possessed, namely, a complete campaign equipment. Every man in the command was fully and correctly uniformed, and every article required by regulations was on hand down to the smallest pill in the medical dispensary.

During the stay in San Francisco, the first promotion was made. Maj. Clayton Parkhill of the medical department was relieved from duty with the regiment and placed in charge of duties in the Department of the Pacific and 8th Army Corps, which made him almost the highest ranking surgeon of volunteers in the department. He was afterwards transferred to Cuba. The position vacated by Maj. Parkhill was filled by the appointment of Capt. Louis H. Kemble. This advanced Lieut. C. E. Locke to a Captaincy. After passing the required examinations, Private David D. Thornton of the Hospital Corps was made Lieutenant-Surgeon.

The regiment's stay in San Francisco was saddened by the death of Sergt. Neil Sullivan of Company H, who succumbed to spinal meningitis.

"DRILL, YE TARRIERS."

EMBARKED FOR MANILA.

The long-expected day of embarking for Manila turned out to be June 14th. Camp was struck at daybreak and the march to the wharves of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company commenced. The line of march was swarming with thousands of well-wishers. By 5 o'clock in the afternoon bag and baggage had been loaded aboard the steamer China, the last case of hardtack of the six months' supply had been stowed in the hold and the last man had climbed aboard. Amid lusty cheering from a dockful of friends the big steamer dropped into the stream and anchored for the night, to wait for the Senator, Colon and Zealandia, which were to accompany the expedition. The next afternoon at ten minutes after one it seemed as if every steam whistle on shore and in the harbor would burst its valves as the fleet commenced to move, the China, designated as the flagship of the expedition, in the lead. On board her besides the full Colorado Regiment were detachments of the 18th U. S. Inf. and the Utah Light Artillery. Brigadier-General Francis V. Greene, who commanded the expedition, was quartered with his staff aboard the same vessel. On the Senator, Colon and Zealandia were the 1st Nebraska Vol. Inf., 10th Pennsylvania Vol. Inf., a portion of the 18th U. S. Inf. of Regulars, part of the 23d U. S. Inf. and the remainder of the Utah Art.

Gen. Merritt, in command of all the Philippine expeditions, rode alongside the China on a tug to the Golden Gate, where he shouted good-bye amid the booming of the Presidio cannon salutes.

The sea expedition, of which the 1st Col. Vol. Inf. was the leading organization, will be passed down in history records as a daring undertaking successfully carried out. The fleet had no convoy and passed fairly into the hostile territory of the Ladroue and Caroline Islands with all the boldness of armored battleships. It was believed among the leading officials on the transports as an absolute fact that several Spanish gunboats were scouring the Pacific in the neighborhood of these islands in the hope of intercepting soldier transports to the Philippines. After passing Honolulu, a conference was held and it was decided to give these gunboats a fight for their prey in case they showed up. The guns of the Utah Battery were mounted on the decks of the vessels and on the China an immense wooden target was constructed. On several successive days the fleet lay to, the target was set afloat and advantageous shelling practice was indulged in. The infantrymen were issued ammunition and also allowed to practice on imaginary gun boats. But the cruise was uneventful as far as hostile operations went.

The troops were landed for a big free dinner and a bath at Honolulu, on June 23d and 24th, while the big ships received coal. The journey was resumed on the 25th. On July 4th the China stopped at Wakes Island and allowed Gen. Greene, Col. Hale and a party of the officers to go ashore and plant the United States flag.

On July 5th, Walter W. Wise, drummer in the regimental band, died of spinal meningitis and was buried at sea.

CAMP LIFE—THE SUNNY SIDE.

The fleet looked in at Guam Harbor on July 9th, and, finding none of Dewey's war vessels there to act as convoy on the rest of the journey, continued on the course to the Philippines unaccompanied.

ARRIVAL AT MANILA.

As the bright morning sun lit up the Pacific on the morning of July 15th, the shores of Luzon, green and handsome, emerged from the haze. At noon on that day came the cry "vessel ahead." There was consternation at first at the thought that it might be a Spanish gunboat, but it turned to joy when the United States cruiser Boston swung alongside and brought word that all was well where Dewey was. As the China sped on, leaving the Boston to convoy the other three vessels to Manila, the despatches were eagerly read. They told of how Cervera's fleet had been totally annihilated and other interesting bits of news. Plunk! went the China's anchor on the afternoon of July 16th and the expedition was safe in Manila Bay, and, among a whole fleet of United States war vessels and transports, the long journey was done. That night the shots of insurgent and Spanish battles could plainly be heard on shipboard.

On July 18th the regiment set foot on the soil which it was to take so important a part in conquering. Two trains of huge cascos, towed by captured Spanish launches, carried the men, weighted down with blankets, canteens, ammunition and equipments for a full-fledged campaign, from the steamer across the bay to the shores of Camp Dewey. As night settled down, the men waded waist deep up the long beach, stowed their accoutrements on the ground, and returned to wade in after supplies. Supper of hardtack and canned roast beef was served about 10 o'clock, and the regiment bunked for the night on shelter tents spread on the ground instead of being raised. A driving, soaking rain came on, and reveille aroused a field of thoroughly wetted and bedraggled men. They realized that soldiering in the Philippines had already begun for them. But the bright sun brought dryness.

ENCAMPED AT CAMP DEWEY.

The Colorado boys were the first full regiment to inhabit Camp Dewey. The day previous to their arrival, a battalion of the Californians from Cavite had made camp.

Immediately after landing, Col. Hale threw out two companies as outposts. They took positions about a mile away towards Manila, and not a great distance back of the insurgents' firing line, for the high Spanish bullets sometimes came back to whistle by the sentries.

A week was spent in making a comfortable camp—as comfortable as could be made with shelter tents—and then the campaign proper was begun.

CAMP LIFE—THE OTHER SIDE OF IT.

The 1st Battalion, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel McCoy and consisting then of Companies I, K, C and D, marched squarely in front of the insurgents' earthworks and proceeded to throw up entrenchments 125 yards closer to the Spanish lines, and extending from the bay shore to the Calle Real, a distance of 300 yards. This battalion worked in almost full view of the Spaniards at the Malate Fort, but who failed to do them any harm, probably laboring under the idea that the workers were Filipinos.

THE FIRST MAN WOUNDED.

While returning to camp on July 30th, the first American of the Manila campaign to be wounded, received a Mauser bullet through the fleshy part of his arm. He was Private Sterling of Company K, 1st Colorado.

Other companies succeeded the 1st Battalion in the newly constructed trenches and were joined by the Utah Battery. The entrenchments were perfected and others thrown up further to the east, and extending in front of block-house No. 14.

SERVICE IN THE TRENCHES.

The Spanish had now begun to pay their compliments so regularly that it became necessary to maintain at least a full regiment in the trenches all the time.

The other troops of the expedition had now landed, and the third expedition with Gen. Merritt had come into the bay.

The 10th Pennsylvania Volunteers experienced a terrific engagement with the Spaniards shortly before midnight on July 31st, probably precipitated by audacious sharpshooters. The Colorado men awoke from slumber to hear the fierce rattle of musketry and the steady booming of cannon. Although the battle was raging two miles away the sounds were terribly distinct and one could almost hear the cries of the fighters. It was plainly evident that the Pennsylvania boys were trying to handle a serious situation and the gunners of the Utah Battery were doing their best to keep time with the boom of the Spanish artillery. Help was surely needed. "To-arms! To-arms!" rang the Colorado bugles and the men not already awakened by the noise of the combat, sprang into their clothes. Belts were buckled on in a hurry and in a threec the volunteers were in line. "Four's right" came the order of each Captain and the companies marched out of the camp streets into the highway, which was fairly swimming in thin, oozy mud caused by the frequent rains.

FIRST BATTLE OF THE REGIMENT.

It was the Colorado boys' first trip into battle, but they went with a sturdy swing and a whoop and a yell that would freeze the blood of almost any Spaniard. The California Regiment, whose camp was in advance of the Colorados, swung in ahead. Rain began to fall in the usual copious quantities of the tropics and walking became a process of floundering along through mud and slime up to the knees.

The battle quieted down before the regiment reached the trenches, but it was kept in reserve until 3 in the morning. The men stood in soaking, shivering rows while the rain beat mercilessly down, without a murmur. Back to camp they went for scarcely two hours' rest, then to be called into the trenches to serve the next twenty-four hours.

THE AWKWARD SQUAD.

Spaniards attempted to make a flank movement on the Americans at a point between where the American and Filipino lines came together, although the Spaniards, after the capture of the city, said they never left their trenches.

The night of Monday, August 1st, was most trying for the Coloradans and especially for the battalions commanded by Maj. Cassius M. Moses and Lieut. Col. McCoy. These battalions held the main trenches and during the heavy rains of the night the Spaniards poured in perfect hells of shrapnel and Mauser bullets. At three different times during the night the shooting from both sides was terrific.

The 1st and 2d Battalions, which were on the line, were especially harassed by the volleys of Spanish bullets and the bursting shells, and Maj. Anderson's Battalion, the 3d, which was in reserve, was forced to throw up entrenchments to protect itself from the missiles which sped high over the heads of the men in the trenches and spent themselves in the rear.

In the engagement of August 1st the Colorado Volunteers lost one man, Fred E. Springstead of Company D, who was shot through the head, and one man wounded, Private Zachary of Company G. The latter received a bullet through the right thigh. It was never learned how many Spaniards fell, but it was ascertained that several of their sharpshooters were dislodged.

THE CAPTURE OF MANILA.

The war with the Spaniards of Manila was now fairly in progress and the officers of the Colorado Regiment worked incessantly in reconnoitering roads and preparing maps for the use of the Brigadier-General in command, Francis V. Greene. It is probable that in recognition of the valuable services of Col. Hale, Lieut. Col. McCoy, Maj. Anderson, Maj. Moses and Capt. William R. Grove of Company I, Colorado was given one of the most important positions in the battle of August 13th, when Manila fell—the trenches nearest the beach.

On the night previous to this attack, a strong detachment of Colorado men, under Capt. John S. Stewart of Company A, went ahead of the entrenchments and threw up temporary earthworks for the use of troops next day. This squad also worked until the early hours of morning, cutting a road through the brush next the seashore to allow the men to advance on Fort San Antonio de Abad without being in full view of the Spaniards there. Previous to this, Sergt. H. L. Clotworthy, Sergt. Cecil B. West and Lieut. Rice W. Means had made reconnaissance which took them fairly under the nose of the enemy and they were able to bring back plenty of information concerning the country to be crossed.

A WOODPILE SHAVE.

At daybreak on the morning of August 13th, the Colorado Regiment was formed and after a short prayer by Chap. Fleming, marched to the front to await the hour of 10 o'clock, when Dewey had promised to open festivities by shelling the trenches of the Spaniards. One of those drenching, pouring rains of the tropics soaked every man to the skin, but the weather cleared just before the battle began.

A few moments before 10 o'clock, the Colorado boys saw the first puff of smoke from the side of the Olympia, lying at the head of the fleet, bouncing around on the troubrous waters of the bay and knew the attack had commenced.

They saw the boys of the Utah Battery pat their monsters and hit bulls-eye after bulls-eye. They saw the guns of the fort dismantled and heard Maj. Bell of the engineers, who had taken his stand on top of the old convent, cry "They are running! They are running! Give it to them boys." The next moment came the order to advance. Companies C and K were the first to pile over the trenches. Their men deployed in open order fairly across the field in front of the earthworks, while the battery shells shrieked their way above their heads. The rest of McCoy's Battalion followed and the extreme right of this skirmish line was forced to return several volleys from the Spaniards. Then they withdrew and fell in with the other companies now pouring like sheep over the trenches, in a grand "hurry-along" and "keep-down" procession up the beach to San Antonio. The men plunged waist deep into the Cingalon River, up the farther bank and on again. The fort was reached without a shot being fired at it. With the rush of conquerors, Capt. Grove, Col. McCoy, Lieut. Ralph Lister and Adj't. Brooks found their way around to its entrance, bounded over the bodies of dead Spanish soldiers, hurried through the debris caused by the shelling and mounted the parapet. The advancing troops in front saw the party spring for the halyard and draw down the remnant of Spanish flag that still flew there. Lieut. Lister and Col. McCoy drew it down. Adj't. Brooks bent on a bright new specimen of "Old Glory" and amid cheers from below, up it went, its folds lengthening out in gorgeous array in the breeze. Thus, the first American flag was hoisted at Manila.

As the Colorado companies marched around the corner of the fort to take possession, they were met by a fierce fire from the woods, 500 yards opposite, to where the Spaniards had fled. The men at once occupied a line of trenches deserted by the Spanish, and proceeded to silence their fire. In the meanwhile, the rear of the Colorado procession was coming up, and the boys were astounded to hear it, faintly at first, then louder, as the Colorado Band swung around the corner, "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-night." The 1st Regiment Band was the only musical organization on the field that morning. That march up the beach with horns playing their loudest and drums beating will never be forgotten by the Coloradans or the other troops who witnessed the proceeding. Bandmaster Harry Irvine led his men, still playing, through the waters of Cingalon, and, dripping and perspiring, squarely up to the Spanish bullets. Ten minutes later the band entered Malate playing "Dixie," and later in the afternoon marched over the Puente de Espana at the head of a bespattered and tired regiment, playing "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle." A little later, at the raising of the United States flag near the office of the Captain of the port, the Colorado Band played "Star Spangled Banner," its first rendition by Americans before Manila citizens.

In the fight for Manila, Charles Phenix of Company I was shot in the neck while the colors were being swung to the breeze in Malate by the Color Sergeants "Dick" Holmes and C. B. Clark. He died from the effects of the wound three days later. Private Frank Smith of Company H was wounded slightly in the neck while advancing with the company down the Calle Real in Malate.

After their all-day tramp and skirmish, the Colorado boys bivouacked at dark inside of Manila, just beside the Tondo bridge, to dispose of a supper of canned roast beef and hardtack. The starving natives fought for the scraps.

At 9 o'clock in the evening, accoutrements were again strapped on, and the march taken up for the district of San Sebastian, in the eastern part of the city. The insurgents outside of the town were still being held at bay, and the Spanish, almost in tears, asked that they be relieved from duty in the trenches that night. Their request was not granted, for the men needed rest. Company H had been left behind to guard Fort San Antonio. The rest of the companies turned in on the floors of the big monastery of San Sebastian.

TROUBLE WITH THE FILIPINOS.

The troubles with the Filipinos, so far as the Colorado boys were concerned, may be said to date from August 14th, the day following the capture of Manila.

CAMP EQUIPAGE.

Companies E and G were sent on outpost duty to the point known as the "Rotunda," where the tramway lines end, to see that no insurgents entered the city under arms. That afternoon the Spaniards were withdrawn from their fortifications, and bands of insurgents immediately started into the town to possess it with the Americans. A body of 300, under an officer of the Pio del Pilar Regiment, attempted to march in past the Rotunda, and were compelled to lay down their arms by less than fifty of the Colorado outpost guard. With fixed bayonets the little band made a stand and halted the insurrectos, who saw that business was meant and offered no resistance. Their arms were afterwards returned to them. During most of the time up to November, the Coloradans maintained two companies daily on outpost duty. They were relieved of this duty by the South Dakota troops and assigned to the guard of Bilibid Prison.

RECRUITS FOR THE REGIMENT.

A very short time after camp had been established in San Francisco, the War Department issued orders for all volunteer organizations to recruit their companies up to the war membership of 106. The Colorado Regiment left Colorado with but an average of eighty-one men to a company, so it was necessary to send back to Colorado for more.

Capt. David P. Howard, Capt. F. W. Carroll and Lieut. W. P. Bidwell were detailed to return to Colorado, make up the quota of 300 recruits and rejoin the regiment as soon as possible.

There were plenty of applicants for the vacant positions in the ranks and the three officers, with the small detail of enlisted men sent back with them, had no difficulty in obtaining the recruits necessary.

On June 21st, the contingent left Colorado. It reached San Francisco on June 24th, nearly ten days after the regiment had sailed for the Philippines. The agents of the Red Cross Society met these men with the same cordiality they had displayed when the regiment had entered San Francisco.

It was August 1st before the first of the recruits got away for Manila. About 150 of them sailed on the transport St. Paul, under Capt. Howard. This contingent landed for a few days at Honolulu and then continued its journey to Manila, arriving there on September 1st.

The other half of the recruits were loaded on the transport Arizona on August 21st. The uncertain course of military affairs caused them to be landed at Honolulu, where they were kept until November 10th, before being taken on to Manila. They arrived in Manila on November 23d, and were immediately assigned to their companies. The strength of the regiment was now approximately 1254 men.

THE HOSPITAL CORPS.

Since the arrival in the Philippines, there had been important changes in one of the Colorado Regiment's most valuable departments—the Hospital Corps. The regiment had left Denver supplied with a medical department whose personnel could scarcely be equaled in the best of regular regiments. At its head was Maj. Clayton Parkhill, one of the most successful practitioners in Denver. Capt. L. H. Kemble, who, upon the promotion of Maj. Parkhill to a staff position, became the head of the department, also enjoyed a large patronage before enlistment. Lieut. C. E. Locke, who afterwards became Captain, was an old National Guardsman and enjoyed the full confidence of all the men. In Manila he was detailed at the general hospital, where he became the universal favorite.

SABBATH TEACHING.

The privates of the corps consisted of twenty-four men, among whom were a large percentage of students of medical colleges whose courses were either finished at the time of enlistment or nearly so; two full-fledged doctors, three practical nurses, one immune and one professional cook. The stewards of the corps were Alexander J. McAllister, E. C. Skiles and E. H. Luce, all three registered pharmacists, the first two men holding positions in leading drugstores in Denver, and the latter the owner of a drug establishment in Pueblo. Senior Steward McAllister had to his credit eight years' service as steward in the regular army. The experience of these men, combined with the care with which the corps was recruited, turned out a sterling organization. The corps was kept intact until San Francisco was reached, when Maj. Parkhill was promoted and all privates mustered into the regular service. They accompanied the regiment on the China to the Philippines, where they were detailed in brigade and division hospitals, two stewards and two privates being left with the regimental dispensary. During the stay of the regiment in Manila nearly every one of these men received promotion and rose to responsible positions. Steward Luce had charge of the purchase of special rations at the division hospital and the general supervision of all the hospital assistants. Capt. Locke became the leading ward physician. Privates Kiesel, Lippenov and Friese were detailed as acting stewards. Just before the regiment was ordered home for muster-out Steward A. J. McAllister received his discharge and accepted a civilian clerkship in the commissary department. During the campaign at the Manila water-works the regimental hospital detachment, which had been augmented by a few regimental hospital privates, maintained stations at headquarters and at the outposts on the Mariquina Road, a mile to the north.

PROMOTION OF COLONEL HALE.

On September 3d, Col. Irving Hale was apprised of his promotion to be a Brigadier-General of U. S. V. and on the 7th of that month he turned the regiment over to its newly appointed commander, Lieut. Col. Henry B. McCoy, and assumed command of the 2d Brigade, 2d division, 8th Army Corps.

Maj. Cassius M. Moses was made Lieutenant Colonel, Maj. Charles H. Anderson became Senior Major and Capt. W. R. Grove of Company I was made Major. Lieut. and Adj't. Alexander McD. Brooks was promoted to a Captaincy and assigned to the command of Company I. He was afterwards relieved to go on special duty as Assistant Adjutant General of the 2d Brigade. General Hale also took on his staff as aide-de-camp, 2d Lieut. Fred L. Perry of Company H. It was in recognition of meritorious services in the Spanish campaign, that 2d Lieut. Rice W. Means of Company E was promoted to a First Lieutenancy and Sergt. Henry L. Clotworthy of Company I was also given a commission as Second Lieutenant. He was assigned to his own company. Lieut. Means was assigned to Company C to fill the position made vacant by the appointment of Lieut. Will Sweany as Regimental Adjutant. Second Lieut. Zollars was transferred from Company I to Company E.

The month of October, 1898, was a trying one for the regiment. Smallpox made its appearance and there was a large amount of sickness among the men, probably due to food improper for use in a tropical climate. The next month conditions were better met; a light diet system was established and the men became more contented. Garrison duty, however, proved very tedious work. A regimental canteen was established which proved to be a huge success and the means for turning much profit, on refreshments and supplies purchased by the men, back into the company funds. On November 19th the regiment held field sports, contesting for medals and prizes offered by the officers of the regiment and by Gen. Hale.

The threatening attitude of the insurgents on December 14th and thereabouts had the effect of relieving the regiment from further duty at Bilibid Prison and re-establishing the outposts. Two companies were again sent daily to the lines opposite the old Spanish block-houses which had been occupied by the insurgent forces, and the precautions against allowing arms being carried into the city became more rigid than ever. The Coloradans had not the slightest trouble with the natives until the outbreak of hostilities on the night of February 4th. The regiment was assigned the care of the line opposite block-houses No. 5 and No. 6 in the vicinity of the Baligbalig Road.

OUTBREAK OF THE FILIPINO REBELLION.

On the night of February 4th, Companies B and K were serving on outpost duty. The opening shots of the war were fired on the right at the San Juan bridge and were returned by the Nebraskans at Santa Mesa. They were plainly heard at the various barracks of the Colorado troops along Calle Alix and in Place Santa Anna. All men were called to quarters and at the second outbreak the order came to move at once to the support of the outposts. The position

each company was to occupy had long before been mapped out by the staff officers and every path and trail was known, so it was a matter of scarcely half an hour before ten companies had gotten quietly into line and hidden in the bushes opposite the block-houses; this, during a lull in the firing.

Companies F and G, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Moses, were the first to be compelled to open fire on the insurgents in front of them. The roar of their Springfields was answered by the guns of the Company L and Company B men on the left. Desultory firing was kept up until daylight, when a gun of the Utah Battery took its stand near Baligbalig Cemetery, and commenced shelling block-house No. 5. The companies all along the line opened up lustily in answer to the fire of the insurgents, and the scrimmage which culminated in the spectacular charge of three companies on block-house No. 5 was decidedly hot. Several of the Filipinos were dislodged from their fortifications, and could be seen making for the rear. It was a sign that the time was ripe for a general routing, and Companies B, K and L, and a platoon of Company H dashed forward, shooting and yelling like Indians. They faced a stiff fire, and Private Carlson fell mortally wounded. On went that savage line, and the occupants of the block-house never stayed to answer consequences. They fled like sheep and the good marksmen from the "Rockies" brought them down with their terrible Springfield bullets.

Block-house No. 5 was the first fort to fall along the entire line. Almost immediately after, the members of Companies F and G, assisted by a detachment of Nebraska troops, entered block-house No. 6.

The fields that Sunday morning were a ghastly sight. At least fifty dead Filipinos lay about—dead at the hands of the Colorado troops.

Companies D and I, under Maj. Grove, were joined to the Nebraska command, and made a spirited charge on the reservoir of the water system, in which they lost two men. The next afternoon they helped make a march of six miles, and were the first troops to enter the captured pumping station of the water-works.

THE SAVING OF THE WATER-WORKS.

The Manila water station lies about seven miles from the heart of the city. The pumping plant is situated on the bank of the Mariquina, or San Mateo River, whose clear waters are forced to the series of tanks, the Deposito, near San Juan, and from there into the city.

The Colorado men played an important part in the great struggle for the safety of Manila's water supply, not only aiding in capturing the station, but subsequently guarding it for months, during a series of decidedly active campaigns up and down the Mariquina Valley, where blood was spilled and men were lost.

When the insurgents forsook the pumping plant they left it disabled. The cylinder-heads of the immense Glasgow pumps had been removed, together with various important parts of the delicate machinery. Lieut. Hilton, in command of Company I, and Lieut. Luther, in command of Company D, directed a long and tedious search for these parts. The river was dragged and dived over and over; old wells were investigated, and a man even crawled through a long water conduit in the hope of discovering the missing parts, which were too heavy to be transported far. The day following the capture of the station, Artificer Guy Hays of Company I caught a glimpse of fresh dirt among the coal in the coalroom. Investigation brought the missing cylinder-heads and other parts to light. They had been buried three feet under ground in the center of the coalroom and the spot covered with coal. Machinists from the volunteer ranks placed the parts in position again and the machinery was started. Manila was saved from a water famine, whose consequences might have been awful.

LOSSES OF THE REGIMENT.

Colorado's total loss in the first brush with the Filipinos was three men killed and five wounded. All the wounded men subsequently recovered.

Carlson of Company L, who fell in the charge on block-house No. 5, received a gunshot wound in the head. He lived in an unconscious state but a short time, and died while being carried off the field.

Private Elmer F. Doran, Company I, was killed by a shot in the chest, in the early hours of the morning, while his company was fighting opposite block-house No. 7.

When Companies D and I charged towards the Filipinos' powder magazine and the reservoir during the morning, Private Cass White, Company D, was lost in the San Juan River. The detachment was crossing a frail bamboo bridge, under a hot fire from the enemy, when Private White fell in. Two days later his body was discovered, and it was ascertained that he had received a bullet in the head before dropping into the river.

The men wounded in the first battle were private Orton T. Weaver, Company B, leg broken above the knee; Private Charles B. Boyce, Company L, flesh wound just above left knee joint; Privates Morrison, Company B; Erle, Company L, and a few others received a few insignificant bullet scratches.

Lieut. Charles S. Haughwout was wounded in the fleshy part of the right leg, below the knee, on the night of February 4th, just as hostilities were starting, by a spent ball from Baligbalig Road, which entered the Lieutenant's room at headquarters, where he was preparing to go to the front.

The regiment took up a position a short distance past the eastern line of block-houses, and carried on a six weeks' campaign from Baligbalig to San Francisco del Monte. It was not deemed wise by the authorities to allow the Colorado Regiment and those at either side of it to permanently occupy the country across the BLOCK-HOUSE 14.

San Juan River, and thus straighten out the lines from Caloocan to the water-works, then held by the Nebraskas. This territory, however, was well scoured by day and well picketed by night. The insurgents gave very little trouble, save on one or two occasions, when they attempted to pick off outpost sentries in the dead of night, or sent in volleys from their long-distance firing-pieces, with sights set at their limits.

It was during this long period that reinforcements were coming over the sea. The Colorado boys saw the pay day of March 1st on the line at Baligbalig.

Two companies remained in town to aid the Provost Guard to maintain order in the San Sebastian and Sampaloc districts. This detail was changed every three days.

The big incendiary fire of February 22d, during which time the insurrection in the city gained the greatest height it was to have, failed to burn anywhere near the Colorado districts, but there was anxiety, nevertheless, and the close vigils probably cowed the insurrectionists in that part of the city.

REGIMENTAL CHANGES.

Second Lieut. Charles E. Hooper of Company B left for San Francisco during January for the purpose of tendering his resignation to the War Department, he desiring to take advantage of a business chance in Denver. The resignation was accepted and the Governor of Colorado named Sergt. Maj. Tingley C. Wood to fill the vacancy. Sergt. Frederick W. Cross was made Sergeant Major in Lieut. Wood's place.

Second Lieut. Franklin Ballou, Jr., of Company L, also resigned his commission.

Gov. Thomas cabled the appointment of 1st Sergt. Cecil B. West to be 2d Lieutenant. He was mustered into service on March 1st and assigned to duty with Company B. Lieut. Wood was assigned to Company L.

Eighteen Chinamen were turned over to the hospital officers of the regiment on March 12th to serve as litter-bearers. This move was considered wise, on account of its being almost impossible to use the regulation ambulance in the country through which the troops were eventually destined to pass in their forward movement. Steward McAllister took charge of the Mongolians, and great were his tribulations in keeping them in hand. But the steward was able to regulate their "pipe-hittings" to a safe scale and keep them from inviting all their brethren in Manila to mess with them on Government native rations. The Chinese litter-bearers did excellent service on the field, as they were able to trot with ease where the ambulance corps would have found much difficulty in passing.

ON THE FIRING LINE, MARCH 14th.

The Colorado Regiment changed its position on the firing line on March 14th being shifted to the water-pumping station near Santolan to relieve the Nebraska Volunteers, who took the place of the Coloradans at Baligbalig. Companies E, F, A and M were stationed at intervals along the pipe-line to guard it from injury by the natives, who lurked in the bushes on all sides. These companies were afterwards moved forward and north to Mariquina Road, where they had several severe skirmishes. Two days after the regiment had established itself at the water-works it became necessary to sally out into the Mariquina Valley and attack the rebels, who were being driven towards Mariquina by the 20th Inf. at Cainta. At noon on Thursday, March 6th, Col. McCoy ordered Companies B and K and a platoon of Company I to prepare for action, while the 3-inch guns of Battery A, Utah, sent off several shells from the bluff just above the pumping station. These were directed fairly at the village of Mariquina, the church of which was just 3350 yards distant. Plenty of insurgents could be seen.

The Company I squad, under command of Lieut. Hilton, moved straight toward the village, while Companies B and K skirted the fields and entered farther above. The entrenchments at the rear end of the town were deserted, but the Filipinos saw fit to make a stand in the vicinity of the large stone church in the center of the place. From here they commenced to rain in a veritable volley of long-distanced shots, which were simply aimed at their limit and therefore were able to drop fairly among the Coloradans as they came up. Rapid volleys of bullets were sent by the Colorado men up the crooked little streets, which had the effect of silencing the enemy and putting them to flight. Several of their sharpshooters however, well pleased, were able to do quite a little execution. A ball from the gun of one of these entered the back of Private Edward Pynchon of Company K as he was shooting from behind a rice ridge and he died from his wound on March 20th.

Maj. Charles H. Anderson received a Mauser through the left leg just above the ankle, which laid him up for several weeks. Corp. Charles W. Haskell, Company L, who was with the expedition, was shot in the left leg, near the hip. Several other men received slight bullet scratches.

The fight lasted until 2:30 P.M., when the Coloradans retired, after setting fire to the town.

ON THE MARIQUINA ROAD.

The position on the Mariquina Road was taken up about March 20th, four companies serving practically as outposts, while in turn they sent forward pickets into the very heart of the rebel country. While passing from camp to outpost, on the night of March 21st, Artificer Archie Aldrich, Company E, was wounded in the left shoulder. A night or two afterward, Private Merton Esshom of the same company received a bullet in the right leg while sitting before his shelter tent in camp.

It was becoming very evident that the volunteers were powerless to cope with the Filipinos while armed with no better weapon than the Springfield rifle. It had been demonstrated in the fight of March 16th that the carrying power of the Springfield rifle was not sufficient to reach the Filipinos, firing their modern Mausers and Remingtons. Col. McCoy, therefore, asked for Krag-Jorgensen rifles for his regiment. There being but a limited number on the island, he was allowed twenty-five for each company. The Colorado Volunteers were the first volunteers to be supplied with repeating firearms.

A decided improvement could be seen in the outpost work, as the men were able to retaliate now and then by picking off an insurrecto.

The monster American advance of March 25th was not intended to take in the Colorado Regiment. Gen. Hall telegraphed in response to Col. McCoy's request that the Colorados be allowed to participate, that the water-pumping station was liable to be attacked by several thousand natives, and must be held at all hazards. He added: "It is sometimes to one's disadvantage to be in command of a thoroughly reliable regiment."

Just previous to this movement the Colorado Regiment had been transferred from the 2d Brigade to the 3d Brigade of the same division, the 2d. Thus, the commanding General became Gen. Hall, Hale's Brigade being in the main advance to the north.

A FIGHT ON MARCH 25th.

Before daybreak on the morning of the 25th, the companies of the 13th Minnesota Vol., who were to move out to protect the right flank of the Nebraska troops, passed through the Colorado Camp. Just as dawn was coming on they moved off into the brush, and soon had a very warm engagement on their hands with the few hundred rebels who were entrenched there. Gen. Hall, who conducted the attack, saw that a flank move of the Filipinos on the Minnesota men was imminent and sent a message to Col. McCoy to have two companies move out and prevent such a movement. The men of the Minnesota command were already beginning to feel a galling flank fire, when Lieutenant-Colonel Moses with companies A and M of Colorado charged down the hill. The move had its effect and the insurgents had their hands full with another attack—in fact, they turned and ran, leaving plenty of bloody tracks and dead men behind them.

Capt. Stewart led Company A and Capt. Spicer, Company M. The advance was not stopped after the first routing, but was kept up. The skirmish lines would be rushed forward several yards and then dropped for volley firing, which got in its deadly work.

Forward at a terrific pace, these companies went for a mile and a half. A treacherous mound of rocks, fairly teaming with insurgents, was taken, and the rush had barely started for a line of trenches fifty yards ahead, when gallant

Capt. John Stewart received a bullet in the abdomen and fell forward dead. Not far from him were wounded Privates M. H. MacCoe and Charles Brill of Company M, and Edw. E. Pitts of Company A, all of whom lived. It was a savage yell that the men gave, especially Company A, as they rushed towards that trench line, after seeing their Captain fall. The Filipinos had strong protection, but they did not care to stay. They broke for safety, and those not halted by bullets were seen no more that day. At 12 o'clock that night they gathered up their scattered forces and made a savage attack on the two Colorado companies which had advanced about a mile further and bivouacked on the top of a hill for the night. In the bright moonlight the outposts saw a stealthy line of skulkers approaching the hill through the underbrush and opened fire before falling back, continuing their shooting as they retreated to the main body. The 150 men on the hill crawled to its edge, as the insurgent bullets whistled in volleys over them, and commenced answering the flashes they saw below. The midnight battle raged for nearly an hour, when the attackers drew off, with much clatter and jabber.

At daybreak the two Colorado companies fell back to the Mariquina Road.

Capt. John S. Stewart was the senior line officer of the regiment, and generally known as one of the best-posted officers it contained. In emergency instances he had often taken command of the 1st Battalion, in place of Lieutenant-Colonel Moses.

Malcolm H. MacCoe, private in Company H, received a wound in almost the same part of the body as Capt. Stewart, but the bullet did not drive so far into his vitals that it could not be removed. With careful nursing he was able to recover.

Private Brill was struck in the right thigh.

Private Pitts spent several weeks in the hospital, nursing a painful wound in his chest, on the left side.

A BRILLIANT CHARGE.

Incidental to the battle of March 25th, was a charge made by a squad of Company E men, under command of Sergt. A. S. Givens. This party had formed the farthest outpost on the ridge next the Mariquina Valley. When Companies A and M advanced to protect the flank of the Minnesota command, the Company E men saw their adversaries directly in front of them commence to pour a pitiless fusillade into the flank of the two companies. The insurgents were strongly fortified among the rocks and gullies of a small hill. It was necessary for the outpost to head off the intentions of these Filipinos, and Sergt. Givens accordingly ordered his men into skirmish order and commanded an advance. It was a nervy thing to do, as there was but one point at which the summit of the hill might be gained. Making a feint, as if to surround the hill, the small party suddenly plunged up the narrow defile and made short work of some twenty natives, who were wounded, killed and scattered in terror in all directions. "Given's Hill" is now one of the historic points of the country in the vicinity of the pumping station.

MORE CHANGES IN THE REGIMENT.

The vacancy in the officers' ranks was filled by the promotion of Lieut. Hilton to be Captain. He was assigned to the command of Company I, and Capt. A. McD. Brooks, who was serving on Gen. Hale's staff, was made Captain of Company A.

The appointment of a 2d Lieutenant was made from the ranks. The commission fell to 1st Sergt. Ben. Lear of Company C. Lieut. Fred L. Perry, Aide on Gen. Hale's staff, was made a 1st Lieutenant and transferred from Company H to Company F, 1st Lieut. Haughwout of that company being transferred to Company I. Lieut. Lear was assigned to Company I, and Lieut. Clotworthy transferred to Company C to take Lieut. Bidwell's place, who went to Company H.

"Camp Alva" was the name given to the position occupied by the companies around the pumping station. This, in honor of Gov. Alva Adams of Colorado, who was in office when the regiment left home.

One company was left in the city now, and this company was relieved every ten days while the regiment was at the water-works.

The shelter-tent camps of each company were well scattered among the picturesque bluffs which overhang the neat little pumping station on the San Mateo River. The band, with its instruments, was on hand and played down the colors each night at sunset, when Capt. Wedgewood of the Utah Battery Detachment sent a shell whizzing among the insurrectos—just to make the noise count. The band also gave small after-supper concerts, which were well enjoyed by the men.

The regimental post exchange was moved from the city to the houses around the pumping station on March 29th, and the men were able to obtain small additions to their mess in the way of jams and crackers.

March 31st was the day Malolos fell, and also the day of a very bloody battle in the Mariquina Valley. Companies C, D, E and G of the Colorado Regiment participated, with two battalions of regulars, and out of the total, seventeen wounded and two killed, lost one killed and six wounded. Corp. Leonard Philipi of Company G was shot in the right frontal region of the head, and died the following day.

The other troops participating in this move were one battalion each of the 23d U. S. Inf. and the 4th U. S. Inf., also two guns of Battery A, Utah Light Artillery.

FIGHTING ABOUT THE WATER-WORKS.

For several days an attack on the water-works by the Filipinos had been threatened, and it was considered advisable to dislodge a few hundred of them from their rifle-pits.

Before daybreak on the morning of the 31st, the Colorado troops, all four companies having been equipped with Krag-Jorgensens, were on the move. Col. Henry B. McCoy was in direct command. The companies were arranged in skirmish order and sent towards the north of Mariquina, in column of companies. The regulars went toward the place from the other side. The Colorados encountered little difficulty until they came to the river, and were then obliged to fire several volleys to dislodge the native outposts on the other side. The Filipinos were not expecting the advance, and they made a fearful clatter as they sprang to arms, after first ringing the village church bell. The river was crossed, the men wading in to their waists, and the village reached, to find that the natives were already on the run. The regulars coming in from the other side, advanced through an empty place.

With Colorado in the firing line, the command then swung up the broad, open valley to the north. The 23d and 4th Infantrymen disposed themselves on the right flank.

The battle was fairly on when the skirmish lines swung around a short bend in the valley and found the insurgents entrenched. A lusty fire was opened up on both sides, the artillery, which had been dragged up, also taking a hand. Short, decisive work won the day, and this set of trenches was carried. The men moved after the refugees under a searching fire from trees far to the right.

Not a Colorado man was hurt until the grand rush had been made some distance further up the valley. Within a mile of the stronghold of San Mateo about a quarter of a mile of earthworks were encountered, which were fairly teeming with belligerents. A stop had been planned for about this point, and, indeed, the companies had turned to retreat, when it was decided between Col. McCoy and Gen. Hall to carry that one point. Needless to state, it was carried, and the men were with some difficulty stopped a little further on.

Lieut. Gregg of Gen. Hall's staff was killed.

Corp. Phillipi and Private Redmond received very severe wounds. Corp. Phillipi died the next day.

The command reached Camp Alva early in the afternoon. Dinner was given the men, and they were then sent eight miles back towards town to strengthen the line near La Loma Cemetery for the night. With all-day fighting, which involved the wading of rivers, the climbing of hills and the crossing of ravines and paddy fields, these men were little short of exhausted, but they bent manfully to their task. But four Coloradans fell out on the journey to the cemetery, which did not end until late in the night. This good record was not made by the regulars, who left behind entire half companies as stragglers.

MORE CASUALTIES IN THE REGIMENT.

In the battle of Mariquina several Colorado men received painful wounds. Private Henry E. Redmond of Company C had a bullet crash through his mouth and enter his neck. Private John Dennis of Company G also received a wound in this region, the ball piercing his neck and lodging in his right shoulder. Corp. John T. McCorkle, another Company G man, had his right thigh injured.

Private Charles S. Hutchinson of Company C was wounded in the fleshy part of his left thigh, and Private George Dickerman of Company C was struck in the left shoulder. On the night previous to the advance on Mariquina the outpost parties of Company E indulged in some hot long-distance battles with the insurgent sentinels, and Private Charles S. McCarty was forced to go to the hospital with a slight bullet wound in his left shoulder.

News reached the regiment that Private Harry B. Kerr of Company H, mounted orderly for Gen. Hale, was wounded severely while the 2d Brigade was advancing towards Malolos. The bullet pierced his chest very close to the heart, and for several days Kerr's life was despaired of. The bullet was finally found, however, and Kerr commenced to mend rapidly.

Another member of the Colorado Regiment, who was fighting near Malolos, and who had a narrow escape from injury, was Lieut. Fred L. Perry on Gen. Hale's staff. Lieut. Perry had a bullet barely graze the front of his stomach, singeing the skin and rendering him deathly sick.

Gen. Irving Hale was slightly wounded below the knee on his right leg during the second day's fight north of Caloocan.

THE REGIMENT TOGETHER AGAIN.

The first days of April found all the Colorado companies together again at Camp Alva, around the water-pumping station. The insurgents in the vicinity of Mariquina evidently remembered their drubbing and failed to re-establish their sharpshooters near the Colorado lines.

During the month of April things went peacefully in this vicinity, the only remarkable event being the disappearance of the muchly conquered Mariquina in smoke. On Saturday, April 15th, Col. McCoy found it necessary to order a detachment of Company G to advance on Mariquina for the purpose of recovering the person of a Utah batteryman, who was reported captured by the insurgents. He had strayed into the town, and was inspecting the deserted church when a band of Filipinos pounced down on him and took him prisoner. On the approach of the Company G contingent, under command of Capt. Dave Howard, the prisoner made his escape and went to meet the Americans. The insurgents were driven out of the city, and simultaneously the thatch of the nipa huts that remained, and also the roof of the big church began to smoke heavily and lurid flames burst forth. When Capt. Howard returned to Camp Alva he reported that he had done all in his power to stop the conflagration, but the village was then totally destroyed. No one seemed to care whose fault it was that the village was finally destroyed, but there were remarks of satisfaction at the disappearance of one of the insurgents' particular strongholds.

ON THE FIRING LINE.

Companies were sent out in all directions from the camp at various intervals through the month of April, but failed to locate any very large body of insurgents within a radius of five miles, except toward the front. The villages of Cainta and Taytay were known to be the strongholds of at least a thousand armed men. No attempt was made to capture them.

Artificer A. A. Aldrich of Company E, who was wounded on March 20th, died at the Military Hospital on April 19th. He was shot through the left shoulder. Blood-poisoning made the amputation of the left arm necessary, which operation the patient failed to survive.

Just previous to the big move of the troops on the north line, Companies B, E, F and M were sent to relieve eight companies of the 3d U. S. Inf. on the trench line to the north of La Loma Cemetery, near Caloocan. The 3d Infantry companies went forward and left the Coloradans to hold the old line. The battalion was under command of senior Capt. David P. La Salle.

A SHARP LITTLE FIGHT.

While conducting a reconnaissance party into the wilds north of the Mariquina Road, on May 1st, 1st Sergt. Clifford H. Bowser of Company K received a painful wound in the left arm and shoulder. The party consisted of seven men from Company K. It had advanced several miles without discovering any insurgents, when it came upon the Filipino outposts of San Mateo. Sergt. Bowser disposed of his men in the bushes, and crawled forward to investigate. Raising himself behind a tree he pulled forth his field glasses in time to look squarely down the barrel of a rifle, and the next moment he felt its bullet. Four other shots rained against the tree before he turned to run back. The insurgents, numbering five, pursued him. When opposite the ambush of the other members of the scouting party three Filipinos were dropped dead and two badly wounded. Defending itself as it fell back, the squad made its way to camp with the wounded Sergeant, who was transported to a hospital.

The men made themselves as comfortable as possible at Camp Alva, by scouring the conquered territory for miles around for sections of nipa thatch with which to build their houses. In some instances they transported the roofs of deserted huts to camp intact. Here they propped up one side, allowing the other to rest on the ground, thus making a very airy, yet dry house. Abandoned articles of house furniture the Colorado men also fell heir to. It was not an uncommon sight to find the off-duty population of a company camp among the picturesque rocks of the Mariquina bluffs, enjoying life on bamboo settees and rockers, and sleeping nights with heads resting on dainty pillows.

THE COLORADO BOYS BUILDING TRENCHES.

The battalion under command of Capt. La Salle remained about ten days near Caloocan, when it was relieved by a detachment of the newly arrived 9th U. S. Inf. and sent back to the water-works.

Private Harry L. Doxsee, Company C, was killed on May 23d while on a trip of reconnaissance near Mariquina. Five Company C men composed the squad, which was in command of Sergt. C. B. Clark. Doxsee strayed ahead of the main party and was fired upon by a band of some thirty Filipinos secreted in the brush. He fell, mortally wounded, and his comrades were forced to retreat to camp for aid. A battalion composed of Companies A, B, C and D routed the Filipinos and obtained Doxsee's body, which was buried on May 24th in the National Cemetery at Manila.

On May 30th the different companies of the regiment sent squads to Manila to decorate the graves of the brave who had fallen victims to disease and bullets. Appropriate Decoration day services were held by different Chaplains of commands.

On one or two occasions during the latter part of May it seemed necessary to send the regiment forward towards Taytay and Cainta, where the rebels could be plainly seen constructing heavy earthworks, but the higher authorities decided to postpone an attack.

THE LAST MONTH ON THE FIRING LINE.

The month of June, 1899, proved to be the Colorado's fighting month and the last of its active service on the firing line.

The mountain stronghold of Antipolo, lying north of Pasig City, was yet untaken. At the entrance to the mountain canyon leading to Antipolo were the villages of Cainta and Taytay, both swarming with insurgent natives. Cainta had been almost destroyed by Gen. Wheaton's troops on March 16th, and it was then seen that it was useless to force the evacuation of the town of Taytay, for the occupants would at once fly back into Antipolo and there be able to defend themselves with considerable success, on account of the natural mountain fortresses surrounding the road of entry.

Gen. Lawton proposed to enter Antipolo from the rear, and simultaneously begin the attack on Cainta and Taytay.

On the night of June 2d six companies of the Colorado command prepared themselves to go on the long tramp through the mountains to tap the back of Antipolo. Gen. Robert H. Hall commanded this expedition, and the next morning, long before the stars grew dim, a column of 2500 men was moving out from the water-works and across the Mariquina Valley. There were, in addition to Companies A, C, F, G, K and L of the Colorados, four troops of the 4th U. S. Cav., the 4th U. S. Inf., the Oregon Volunteers, a battalion of the Wyoming Volunteers, a battalion of the 9th Regulars and Hawthorne's Mountain Battery of four guns. This formed a stupendous army, and when the dwellers in the foot-hills looked out on the green valley that morning they beheld a rather imposing sight. Traveling in skirmish line were the various commands, and they stretched almost as far as the eye could see. The tiny mountain guns, rigged with shafts were drawn along by a single mule or a horse, each, and the ammunition was dragged along in Philippine carts.

Col. McCoy deployed his companies towards the muchly conquered village of Mariquina, and, after firing three volleys, it sent a platoon of Company L into the place. No natives were discovered. Gen. Hall saw fit to send the mounted cavalry troop—the other three troops were afoot—towards San Mateo to reconnoiter. Considerable time was thus wasted in scouting about the valley and determining the proper place to enter the mountains. Two Filipino guides, furnished by the Colorado Regiment, pointed out the proper gorge to follow. Two deep gullies were encountered, which it was necessary to bridge in order to get the artillery across.

At 1 o'clock Hall's Brigade started into the mountains. The plans of the expedition had provided for the appearance of the troops at that hour back of Antipolo. Antipolo was not reached before 9 o'clock the next morning.

The Filipinos, hidden in the low brush on the hillsides, began to pour in their fire on the American skirmish lines, advancing in broad stretches towards them, and it then became necessary to combat every step of the way into the hills. The artillery, gotten safely across the gullies, opened up from the valley and dislodged several bodies of combatants high up on the mountains. They swarmed out like flies, and from the plain below looked like tiny specks as they made for safety on the opposite sides of the ridges.

The Oregon Volunteers and the cavalry formed the advance guard on that afternoon's advance. Their skirmish lines tapped many an ambush and swung high onto the tops of the mountains and deep into the canyons after prey. Two men were killed and several wounded during the afternoon.

In column of twos the rear of the column struggled along over the narrow, crooked trail made by native bull sleds, and at times narrowed to single file as the path wound into narrow glens and up steep inclines between bushes and over boulders.

The entry to the mountains had been made five miles to the north of Antipolo. The lines swung to the south after finding the trail, and advanced directly towards the mountain city.

The day was cruelly hot and scores of men fell fainting by the roadside. Water was scarce, and the exertion of climbing and fighting told fearfully on many. The ambulances had been left behind, as they had found it impossible to follow the rough mountain paths. The small cannon were jerked and dragged along over the roughest places imaginable, and one four-mule team, with wagon loaded heavily with ammunition, traveled bravely along over places which nearly wrecked the artillery carriages. The next morning the path became too preposterous, and the driver had to climb down. The wagon was burned to save capture by the Filipinos.

The column bivouacked and sent out sentry posts for the night about three miles from Antipolo. The next morning Colorado was placed in the advance, and had a taste of the arduous mountain skirmishing. Only one man was wounded in the lively firing which the Filipinos kept up as they skulked from one ridge to another. This was Charles T. Hickman of Company A.

Gen. Lawton evidently miscalculated the speed of Hall's Brigade, for he sent the North Dakotas and the 12th Infantry against Taytay and Cainta on the night before the mountain stragglers reached Antipolo. Taytay was captured without the loss of a man, and the rebels fled back up the mountain to Antipolo. Hearing the shooting of Hall's column, three miles away, they stampeded southward to Morong.

The Colorado men surrounded Antipolo, and advanced on an empty town. Lawton's column was met half way between Antipolo and Taytay, in the middle of the blistering hot day. The supply wagons, a train of twenty-one, caught up at this point, and fresh rations were issued. After a three hours' rest, Hall's Brigade was turned to go back up the Spanish mountain road into Antipolo and take up the chase of the rebels, while troops boarded cascoes on the lake, to be towed up to Morong, to head them off in that direction. Here, there was another miscalculation. The troops on the lake attacked Morong, nearly twenty miles up the shore, on the night of the 4th of June, and Hall's men did not march up to the rear of the town before the morning of the 5th. The rebels had withstood the fire of the gunboats and the landing infantry for a time and fled, leaving a dozen of their dead in an elaborately constructed series of entrenchments.

An eighteen hours' rest was given the men, and the start for the water-works was commenced on the 6th, along the shore of the Laguna de Bay, which was skirted by one of the old Spanish roads. Part of the 4th Cav. and the Dakotas were left to garrison Morong. The conquered villages of Binangonan and Angona were passed on the way home, camp for the night being made at the former place. Through heavy roads and a pelting rain the column marched into Santolan, opposite the water-works, on June 7th, after a tramp of over fifty miles.

The tropical heat and the rough country told fearfully on the Colorado troops, although they did not suffer as badly as the other commands in the brigade. About fifty men dropped out and made their way painfully back to camp.

At Antipolo, the Americans found people inside of three hours after the village had been fired into by them. The returning column, on the 4th, encountered hundreds of families returning from the direction of Teresa and Morong, under the impression that the United States soldiers had permanently left the place in the morning. None of these natives were molested, although it was plainly evident that many of the able-bodied men had been fighting in the insurgent army. The Filipino is an adept at throwing away his gun and donning the clothes of a “mucho pobre” peasant. Several hundred pounds of ammunition were discovered and confiscated at Antipolo, also several home-made projectiles for a cannon.

The people of Teresa flew for their lives, but returned the next morning, when they found they were not to be harmed.

At Morong a shattered wooden cannon was found. It had been constructed by surrounding a thin piece of gas pipe with wood and placing sheaths of iron around the affair. The touch-hole was badly shattered, where the entire charge in the gun had passed through.

At Angona, on the lake front, several gun-pits were destroyed, but none of the reputed big shooters were discovered. The casualties on the trip amounted to three men killed and half a dozen wounded; Colorado had but one man hurt.

WITH LAWTON TO PARANAQUE.

Lawton's move on the Paranaque region was next.

The scene of the fighting was now transferred from the water-works region to the extreme south line. This territory had been left to the Filipinos ever since the outbreak, and now it was determined to make an effort to close in on them. Well-armed Filipino warriors to the number of about 8000 were known to be making Paranaque and Las Pinas their headquarters. The American lines hemmed them in from the beach to Pasai, and the Americans also held the river and the Laguna de Bay. The monitor Monadnock lay off Paranaque, so to all appearances the running of a line from the Laguna de Bay to a point below Las Pinas would bottle up the insurrectos.

Six companies of the Colorado command and one troop of the Nevada Cavalry were the only volunteers chosen for the 5000-man expedition. The rest were regulars.

San Pedro Macati was the rendezvous. June 9th was a busy day at this point, the commands arriving from their various stations. Col. McCoy and Companies B, D, F, I and M marched from the water-works to Pasig, crossed the river there and marched down to San Pedro, Capt. Rucker, with Company E joining the command there, having marched out from Manila. The six companies were divided into battalions of three each and commanded by Maj. W. R. Grove and Lieut. Col. C. M. Moses, respectively. Six Chinamen were allotted to each company, for the traveling next day was to be rough and all ammunition and food must be carried. Each man was furnished with 150 rounds of ammunition. Haversacks and canteens were the only equipment allowed.

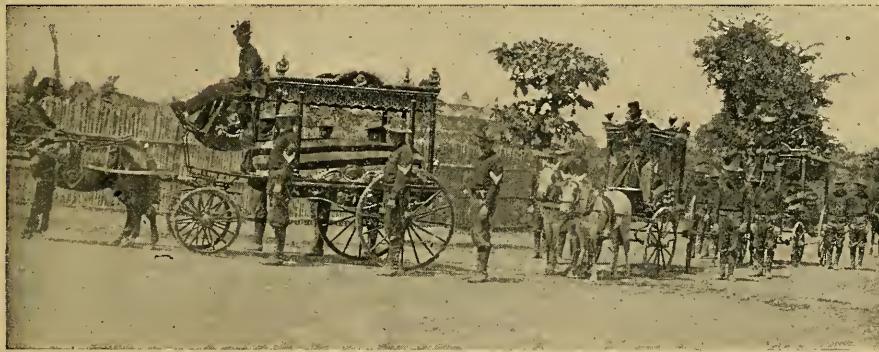

At 3 o'clock on the morning of June 10th there was a general arousing of the mighty camp of sleepers—men slept in a light rain without a shred of protection—coffee was taken and the column was formed. The Colorado boys were placed at the head of Gen. Wheaton's Brigade, behind which followed Gen. Ovenshine's Brigade of regulars.

The river was to be followed and then the hills skirting the southern shore of the Laguna de Bay to a point opposite Paranaque, when right turn was to be executed and the line run down to the bay.

The plans were good, but very difficult of fulfillment, owing to the exceedingly puzzling country and its rough nature.

The sun was just rising when columns of fours were broken and the bugles rang "deploy as skirmishers." Colorado took the extreme left and started its long line over hill and into gully, through grass waving waist high and drenching one to the skin with early dew. Jungles had to be penetrated and rocky ridges climbed in order to make an even advance upon the enemy. It was exhausting work. Breathless, the men would struggle out of a ravine to be ordered forward into line and then crawl wearily over a hill. A mile of this progress and the enemy, entrenched on a heavily wooded hill 800 yards ahead opened up. Down on their knees went the skirmishers, cartridges were shoved home and the battle began. Above the pop, and sputter of the Mausers and Remingtons and the loud bang of the Krag-Jorgenses could be heard the shrill commands of the officers passed on down to the non-commissioned squad commanders. "Fire by volleys" brought the long even music of war which tells on the enemy. "Forward" brought the men struggling up off their bellies to rush ahead fifty yards to another vantage place and pour in the lead again.

Corp. Fred Reed and Private W. J. Currier of Company E, both fell, hit by the same bullet, the former in the side and the latter in the arm. Private Harry

ONE OF THE SAD SIGHTS WHICH WERE ALMOST DAILY TO BE SEEN IN MANILA
AFTER FEBRUARY 5th.

Hegwer received a bullet in the neck, which passed diagonally downward and out the shoulder. Onward went the skirmish line, a little ragged perhaps, owing to exhausted ones failing to keep up, but driving the Filipinos before it. Company F was ordered to take the menacing hill from which the first shots rained, and dashed up its slope as one man. Surprising half a dozen insurrectos in a set of entrenchments, there was almost a hand to hand battle as every American got his man, and received not a scratch. A little later, though, Company F ran into more shots and Private H. A. Macklem was wounded in the temple, Frank Duval had his leg broken by a bullet and Thomas Rylott fell on a bolo he had captured and cut himself badly in the leg.

It was rather discouraging news that was passed along the line: "Col. Moses is hit," but forward went the command and another San Juan hill was taken. Lieut. Col. Moses was hit early in the fight while directing the operations of his battalion. The bullet hit him in the left forearm and severed an artery. He was carried from the field with his wound bleeding profusely.

Private Asa Morrill of Company D was the only man hit in that company. He received a bullet through the neck, which did not result dangerously. Col. McCoy's orderly, Francis J. Henry, was shot in the right arm. Company B lost Sergt. George M. La Shell and Private Young. The latter was hit in the knee. Sergt. La Shell had his gun leveled at a bunch of Filipinos, when a bullet from their way hit the barrel of the rifle and tore it to pieces. It then glanced back and tore a hole in the Sergeant's arm.

In the enthusiasm of the first brush with the enemy the Colorado command failed to wait for the regulars, who were supposed to join it on the right, and consequently was conducting a little campaign of its own, when it came time to gather the men together and make the turn for the south. The Filipinos had gotten well away in that direction, being urged along by shots from the gunboats on the lake.

SKIRMISH LINE CHARGING THE ENEMY IN A BAMBOO THICKET.

fatiguing march ever undertaken by any troops began and lasted for two hours, as the various commands made their way in skirmish order across miles of fields, covered with high grass and rice furrows. Water was scarce and the heat was terrific. Scarcely were there fifteen men to a company when a halt was called near the edge of the wood, supposed to contain Paranaque and several thousand insurgents. One by one the exhausted ones came straggling up to join their commands.

The wake of the army across this burning field was strewn with discarded haversacks, packages of extra ammunition, blouses and anything to lighten the burden on one's shoulders.

Lunch was taken upon the arrival of the straggling and terrified Chinese carriers.

The country which the troops were now roving about was more bewildering than ever. Stretches of pasture gave way to lines of bamboo woods and hedges of tropical trees and plants which completely shut off the view to the region beyond. It was necessary to deploy skirmish lines directly at lines of woods and take chances on the Filipinos being there in their hidden trenches.

Company E of the 1st Colorado and Troop I of the 4th Cav. now went ahead under the direct charge of Col. McCoy. Advancing a mile across the open and into another clearing beyond, the men encountered the enemy's firing coming from the woods seven or eight hundred yards ahead. Engaging them while the rear commands were brought up and deployed, the Coloradans conducted another lively battle. Suddenly a few warning cracks of Mauser bullets caused a portion of the line to wheel about and commence firing commands in the greatest haste. The enemy had succeeded in getting around the front of the column and was beginning to pour in a flank fire. Half the Colorado companies and the 21st Inf. were instantly started to rout them, while three companies forded rivers almost to their necks and met the fire from the other direction. The move on the part of the Filipinos was clever, but the quick and determined work of the Americans soon silenced their shots, and things were again ready for advancing. Private Joe Kearns of Company M was carried back from the flank skirmish with a bullet in the leg.

There was an advance of a mile or so further and darkness came upon the wearied army, floundering around through morasses and rough rice ground. After clearing the territory surrounding with numerous volleys of rifle fire and cannon shells, the men were allowed to literally drop in their tracks to court sweet repose on the up and downy bosom of a rice field, unmindful of a pattering rain, which fell all night long.

Stiffened joints grew limber in the bright sunshine of the next morning, and the brigades moved forward, struck the Calle Real, and moved into the village of Las Pinas unmolested. White flags fluttered, and the cinnamon faces of the inhabitants peered out from their huts. All Filipino warriors who had not escaped had buried their guns and become "amigos."

RETURN TO MANILA.

There was a stacking of arms and a general drying out and recuperation until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the Colorado command was dismissed, to march north through Paranaque ten miles into Manila. They passed series after series of the most savage-looking entrenchments and many strong redoubts. These had all been built to withstand an attack from the Manila side. The plans of the Filipinos had again failed.

Quarters were reached at 8 o'clock, and the next day five companies were sent back to their places at the water-works, which position the Colorado Volunteers continued to hold until the welcome invitation came to embark for home.

REGIMENTAL CHANGES.

Early in June some promotions in the commissioned-officer list were announced. Second Lieut. Albert J. Luther of Company D, was made a 1st Lieutenant, to take the place of 1st Lieut. W. J. Vamice of Company K, who resigned and returned to the United States, on account of ill health. Sergt. Frank DeVotie of Company D was promoted to the position of 2d Lieutenant, and 1st Sergt. Jud Palmer of Company G was assigned to a similar position. Lieut. Borstadt was assigned to Company K, Lieutenants Luther and DeVotie to Company D, and Lieut. Palmer to Company B, in place of Lieut. West, who was transferred to Company E, the 2d Lieutenant of that company, Charles O. Zollars, having resigned his commission and gone home.

Just prior to starting on their tiresome skirmish into the Paranaque region, on June 10th, the Colorado companies in the field were apprised of the death of 1st Sergt. Clifford H. Bowser, who was wounded severely in the arm and shoulder on May 1st, while conducting a scouting party through the wilds north of the Mariquina Road. The wounds failed to heal properly and an amputation was necessary. Sergt. Bowser did not survive the operation and died, one of the honored sons of the regiment.

On June 12th, Private Edgar Pate of Company H received a severe wound in the knee, while lying in his tent in camp at the water-works. The insurgents of Mariquina Valley, taking advantage of the absence of half the companies, fired several volleys at the camp in the early morning, fortunately wounding but the one man.

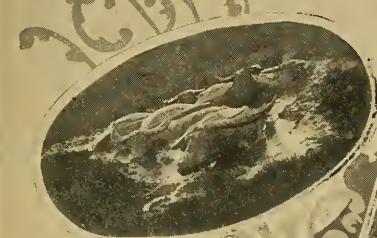

THE REGIMENT ORDERED HOME.

The announcement that Colorado's work was done was sent forth from department headquarters on July 4th, and the men added a number of yells of joy to the racket of a modest celebration of Independence day, consisting of a few unwarranted volleys of rifle shots, delivered at the Mariquina landscape. Camp was broken on July 5th, and on July 6th, the regiment marched to Manila. The 21st U. S. Inf. took up the water-works position.

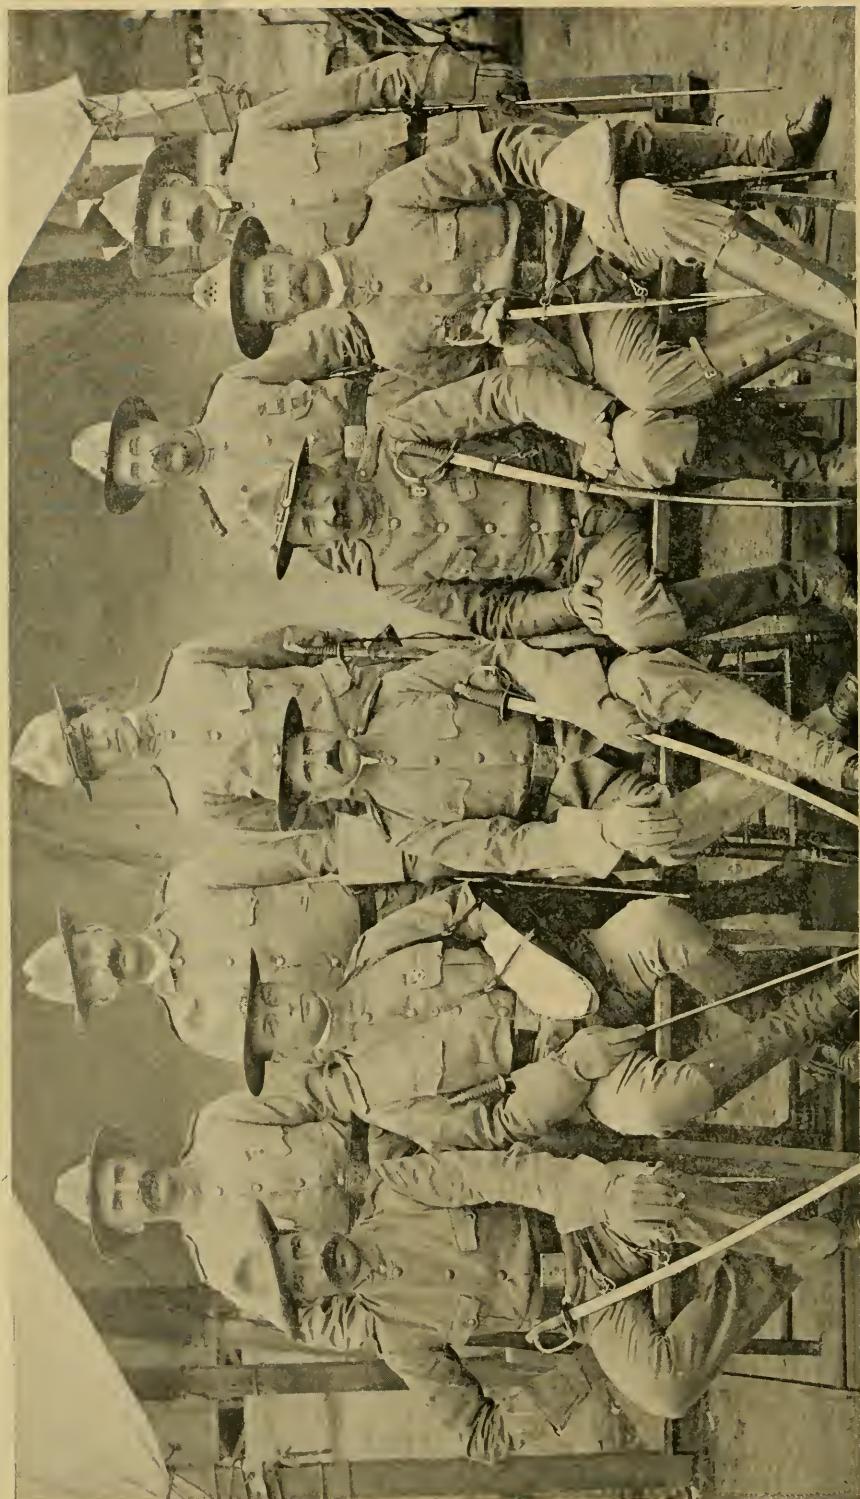

It took less than ten days to settle up the affairs of the regiment and provide for the discharge of the men who had filed requests to be left in Manila. There were about one hundred and thirty of these and thirty of them enlisted at once in the new volunteer regiment, the 36th Inf. Maj. W. R. Grove accepted the position of Lieutenant-Colonel in this regiment. Among the officers of the 1st Colorado who resigned to accept commissions in the new veteran volunteer command were Capt. E. E. Booth, Lieut. Ben Lear, Lieut. C. H. Sleeper, Lieut. C. F. O'Keefe. Thus, room was made for more promotions. The cabled announcement of these reached Manila on the day the regiment embarked on the transport Warren, July 15th. Capt. David P. La Salle was made Major; Lieut. George Borstadt, the regimental commissary officer, Captain; Lieut. W. T. Doertenbach, Captain; 2d Lieut. Walter P. Burke, 1st Lieutenant; Lieut. Samuel Thomas, 1st Lieutenant; Lieut. Ralph B. Lister, 1st Lieutenant; 2d Lieut. James A. Gowdy, 1st Lieutenant. The new 2d Lieutenants, appointed from the ranks, were as follows: Sergt. Maj. Frederick Gross, 1st Sergt. A. B. Teal, 1st Sergt. Russell H. Ingwersoll, Sergt. H. I. Lawrence, Sergt. A. L. Bing, Sergt. Alexander Shaw.

The transport Warren, bearing the entire 1st Regiment, Colorado Inf., and about 300 discharged soldiers of other commands, steamed out of Manila Harbor for Nagasaki on the morning of July 18th, just a year from the day the command landed at Camp Dewey.

After a week of most unpleasant weather, the Warren reached Nagasaki on July 25th, where coal was taken for the final stage of the homeward journey and the course set northward through the beautiful Inland Sea of Japan for Yokohama. The enthusiastic sight-seers arrived there on July 30th, and after a three days' period of pleasurable sight-seeing set off across the broad Pacific, reaching San Francisco on August 16th, where the regiment was mustered out of service on September 8, 1899.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

IRVING HALE, Brigadier-General, was born at North Bloomfield, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1861. In 1865 his parents took him to Colorado. They crossed the plains in a prairie schooner, being forty days en route from St. Joseph, Mo., to Denver. From 1865 to 1873 he lived in Central City, Col. In 1873 the family removed to Denver, where they lived for five years, returning to Central City in 1878.

He received his early schooling under his father, Dr. H. M. Hale, whose life has been devoted to educational work until recently, when he retired from the Presidency of the Colorado State University. In 1877, Irving graduated from the East Denver High School at the head of the first class which left that institution.

He was always fond of athletic sports, hunting, fishing and roughing it in the mountains. In 1878, with a friend, he tramped over Middle Park, walking more than 500 miles from place to place, not counting hunting and fishing trips, which probably aggregated nearly as much more. On this trip he encountered numerous hardships and dangerous experiences, and narrowly missed a body of Indians who had just started an outbreak, but managed to elude them and leave the park. The following year he conceived the idea that it would be a profitable experience to run an express line through Middle Park, so from his previous earnings he bought a mule team and covered wagon, and throughout the summer plied back and forth alone through the practically uninhabited country between Central City and Grand Lake, a distance of seventy-five miles, experiencing many difficulties, breakdowns and hardships, that severely taxed his pluck and ingenuity. On those trips he took his books and studied as he drove along the road, in preparation for the competitive examination for appointment to West Point. On the last trip out of the park, on his way to take the examination, the heavy timber on the regular Berthond Pass Road was found to be on fire for miles, and he was obliged to take the abandoned and almost impassable Boulder Pass Road, which was in such condition that at several places it was necessary to remove everything from the wagon and carry the load up the hill by hand. He succeeded, however, in reaching the appointed place for examination; passed the highest, and received the appointment to West Point.

Entering the academy in June, 1880, he was graduated at the head of the class in 1884, with a total of 2070.4 points out of a possible 2075. This is the highest record that has been made in the entire history of the United States Military Academy. After a three months' leave, Lieut. Hale reported for duty at the headquarters of the Corps of Engineers, Willet's Point, N. Y., and took the post graduate course in torpedos and civil and military engineering. During this tour of duty he was promoted to 1st Lieutenant (1886) and appointed Instructor in torpedo service, and (1887) Quartermaster and Commissary of the Battalion of Engineers, serving also on boards on the Patrick Automobile Torpedo and the Washington Aqueduct Bridge. In June, 1887, he was married to Miss Mary V. King, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel W. R. King, then commandant of the post.

He was an expert and enthusiastic rifle-shot, being a member of the Battalion of Engineers' skirmish team that won on three successive years and thus retained the Sheridan Skirmish Trophy at Creedmoor, and representing the battalion in 1888 at the army rifle competition at Fort Niagara, in which contest he won 1st Division gold medal for best four days' combination, known distance and skirmish firing, and also 1st Division skirmish medal. After returning from Niagara in September, 1888, he reported for duty at West Point as Instructor in civil and military engineering.

In 1888, obtaining six months' leave of absence, Lieut. Hale returned to Colorado and superintended the building of the first successful electric road in Denver. In the spring of 1890, he resigned from the army, and associated himself with the Edison General Electric Company (afterwards the General Electric Company), of which he was manager of the Rocky Mountain district when war was declared with Spain.

Since leaving the army he has received the honorary degree of Electrical Engineer from the Colorado State School of Mines, and has become a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers and of the Colorado Scientific Society. For these societies he has written numerous papers, has contributed to scientific magazines, and has frequently lectured on electrical and military subjects. He is also a member of the Sons of the American Revolution and vice-president of the Colorado Society, his Revolutionary ancestor being Col. John Hale, brother-in-law and member of the staff of Gen. Prescott, and a participant (as was also one of his sons, a private), in the Battle of Bunker Hill. Gen. Hale had two uncles on his mother's side in the Union Army of the Civil War.

On the reorganization of the 1st Regiment Inf., National Guard of Colorado, in 1897, he was induced to accept the Lieutenant-Colonelcy; in a few months he was promoted to Colonel, and in December was appointed Brigadier-General in command of the entire guard of the State. Immediately on entering the service he established a regimental school, which was held weekly, instructions being given on the West Point recitation system in drill regulations, guard and outpost duty, marches, camps, regulations, etc. A broader and more systematic routine of drills was also inaugurated. On his promotion to the command of Brigadier this method of instruction was extended to all of its organizations, and a brigade lyceum was established, which held meetings, attended by officers from all parts of the State, and devoted to papers and discussions of military subjects of special importance.

This course of instruction made the National Guard of Colorado excellent material from which to organize a volunteer regiment in the outbreak of the Spanish War.

When the 1st Colorado Inf., U. S. V., was formed, Brigadier-General Hale was appointed by Gov. Adams to the Colonelcy, and continued in a still more thorough manner, through Camp Adams in Denver, Camp Merritt in San Francisco, the voyage in the Philippines, and the campaign before Manila, the careful instruction and rigid discipline which had produced such good results in the National Guard.

Soon after the capture of Manila, on August 13, 1898, Col. Hale was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General of Volunteers, to date from August 13th, on the strength of the following recommendation:

For gallant and distinguished services in constructing the trenches, personally reconnoitering the ground in his front, clearing the ground during the night preceding the attack, and leading his regiment during the assault of August 13th. Col. Hale is well qualified by ability, education and experience for the rank of Brigadier-General. He has maintained his regiment in a high state of efficiency and discipline and has taken the lead in reconnoisseances, constructing trenches and other military work of preparing for the attack, to which, in a large measure, is due the result of capturing Manila with such slight loss.

Gen. Hale was assigned to the command of the 2d Brigade, 2d Division, 8th Army Corps, which he held during the semi-peaceful occupation of Manila, until the outbreak of the Filipino-Insurgent War, February 4, 1899, and throughout that war, personally leading it in all of its many engagements and marches, which are more fully enumerated in the history of the brigade.

HENRY B. MCCOY, Colonel, commanding officer of the Colorado Regiment, although a man young in years, had had much military experience when he entered the United States service, May 1, 1898. His first duty was done as a member of the 4th Regiment of the National Guard of Illinois, where, as a non-commissioned officer, he took part in the labor strikes at Lemont. He first entered the National Guard of Colorado about thirteen years ago, and his first commission was as Adjutant of the 4th Battalion, the National Guard at that time being organized as battalions. From this position he was advanced to that of Major, and at the only National Guard Camp ever held in the State, commanded the 2d Battalion. From this position he was soon advanced to that of Colonel of the 2d Regiment, and in that capacity commanded the active forces in the miners' strike at Leadville in 1896, when the entire National Guard of Colorado served for about six months at an altitude of two miles above sea level, with the thermometer as low as twenty degrees below zero some of the time. Col. McCoy also participated actively in the several labor strikes at Cripple Creek, when the National Guard of Colorado was called into the service for the protection of life and property. In the organization of the 1st Colorado Inf. for the United States service, a consolidation was effected of the National Guard, and Col. McCoy came out as Lieutenant-Colonel. He was promoted from this position to that of regimental commander, September 7, 1898, and has made a record second to no officer in the volunteer service in the Philippines in that capacity. Col. McCoy has been strongly recommended for the position of commander of one of the volunteer regiments now going into the service. He was recommended for brevet as Brigadier-General by Gen. Hall, for splendid service in the field. In private life, Col. McCoy is clerk of the district court of the 10th Judicial District of the State of Colorado and has his home at Pueblo. He was born at Carlinville, Ill., August 5, 1863. He is married and was fortunate in having Mrs. McCoy with him during the entire campaign in the Philippines.

[We have been unable, after making every effort, to procure the biographies of the following officers of the Colorado Regiment: Lieut. Col. Cassius M. Moses, Maj. La Salle and 1st Lieut- and Quartermaster Wm. B. Sawyer.—Publishers.]

C. H. ANDERSON, Major, is a native of Darwin, Clark County, Ill., and is 32 years of age. When he was 13 years old, his parents moved to Denver, where he obtained his education in the public schools of that city. May 6, 1889, he enlisted as bandsman in the 1st Regiment, Colorado National Guard, and was afterward promoted to 1st Sergeant, Captain, Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel of that organization. He was mustered into the volunteer service as Major of the 1st Colorado Volunteer Inf., May 1, 1898, and served with his regiment in that capacity throughout the campaign. McCoy, who commanded the 2d Inf., N. G. C. During the service of the National Guard of Colorado at the labor strikes, Lieut. Sweeney occupied a position as Regimental Commissary, and subsequently became Regimental Quartermaster.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOHN A. TAYLOR, Captain, Company D, was born in Prince Edward Island, April 12, 1857, of Scotch parentage. At the age of seventeen, he was apprenticed for five years to learn the blacksmith trade. He emigrated to America and went directly to Colorado in 1879, and settled in Greeley, Col., where he was engaged in the blacksmith business until the call for volunteers for the Spanish-American War. He has been actively engaged in the National Guard of Colorado, since 1882, serving all the way from a private to his present position. In 1896, he organized Company D, of State National Guard, and was commissioned Captain shortly after the muster-in of the company. The miners strike, in Leadville, called into the service the entire National Guard force of the State. Capt. Taylor served with his company during the entire trouble. Upon the call of the President for volunteers, he tendered the Governor of the State the service of his company, and was accepted and became a part of the 1st Regiment of Colorado Inf., of which organization he is justly proud.

FRANK D. DeVOTIE, 2d Lieutenant, Company D, is a native son of Colorado, born at Greeley, Weld County, Col., August 27, 1871. He lived on a farm near Greeley until 1886, when he entered the Agricultural College, at Fort Collins, Col. Until April, 1892, he pursued his studies there along the line of irrigation engineering, receiving at the same time the excellent military training which that institution affords, spending his vacations and holidays at home on the farm. In April, 1892, nine weeks before graduation, he quit college to accept a position as bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Greeley. After two years in the bank, he went to Kearney, Neb., where for one season he applied his knowledge of irrigation. After returning from Nebraska, he worked as clerk and bookkeeper in a real estate and insurance office. He was recording clerk in the county office about three years, and elected County Surveyor of Weld County, Col., November, 1897. He served the State of Colorado, as 2d Lieutenant in the National Guard from April, 1896, until the call for volunteers for the Spanish War, taking part in the campaign during the miners' strike in Leadville in 1896-97. May 1, 1898, upon the call came for volunteers, he resigned his office as County Surveyor, and was mustered in as Sergeant and appointed 2d Lieutenant, May 29, 1899, by Gov. Thomas of Colorado, and mustered into the United States service as such June 11, 1899.

Tiring of school, he turned his attention to business until the fall of 1897, when he entered the Denver Homœopathic Medical College, and had just finished the first year as president of his class, when the President issued his first call for volunteers. He at once enlisted in Company E, of the National Guard of Colorado, and when the militia was ordered into camp he was acting as company clerk. He was mustered into the service of the United States as Corporal, May 1, 1898. While en route to Manila, P. I., on board the steamship China, he was made Sergeant, July 1, 1898. During the two or three comparatively quiet months which followed the occupation of Manila, he was made Battalion Sergeant-Major. BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

W. F. DOERTENBACH, Captain, Company A, was born January 17, 1866, in Cleveland, Ohio. He attended the public schools to the age of 13 years, when a desire to see more of the world led him to seek a berth on one of the numerous vessels plying on the Great Lakes. Returning to his home, he was apprenticed to a carpenter; at seventeen, he entered the Ohio Business University, but after eighteen months' study, found this restraint too irksome, and again returned to his profession as carpenter. He was an ardent student of nature, and devoted most of his leisure to the study of ornithology, and the collection of notes and specimens. A member of the A. O. U. and A. A., and a correspondent of the Smithsonian Institute; removing to Colorado in 1887, he found much new material for his favorite study, and, accepting a position as furrier and taxidermist with a prominent firm in Pueblo, settled there. He enlisted as a private in Company C, 2d Regiment, National Guard Colorado, December 16, 1889; appointed Corporal in May, 1890; appointed Sergeant in June, 1890; appointed 1st Sergeant, which position he held for nearly a year; elected 2d Lieutenant of Company C, April, 1892; elected 1st Lieutenant of Company C, January, 1893; assigned to command Company C, June, 1893; elected Captain of Company B, 2d Regiment, National Guard of Colorado, April, 1894; served through Cripple Creek, City Hall, and Bull Hill campaigns, in 1894; was promoted to be Major and Inspector-General of Rifle Practice, October, 1895, which position he held until the reorganization of the guard in 1897. When the Spanish-American War broke out he left a lucrative fur business to accept the position of 1st Lieutenant in Company B, 2d Regiment, National Guard of Colorado, which, in the change from State to United States troops, became Company A, 1st Regiment, Colorado Inf., U. S. V. He participated in every engagement that the regiment took part in during the Spanish-American War and the Filipino insurrection; was assigned to command Company A, 1st Regiment, Colorado Inf., March 26, 1899, while in the field; was promoted to be Captain, July 14, 1899, and assigned to command Company A, 1st Regiment, Colorado Inf., U. S. V., on the same date.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CHARLES B. EASTMAN, Captain, Company H, was born in Wyoming, Iowa, June 24, 1871. He emigrated to Nebraska, with his parents, at the age of 14 years, living in Beatrice, Neb., where he attended school, afterwards reading law with Attorney Robert W. Sabine of that city, until the year 1890, at which time he emigrated to the State of Colorado. In 1891, he enlisted in Company H, National Guard of Colorado, stationed in Boulder; served through Leadville and Cripple Creek strikes. He was promoted to the office of 1st Lieutenant of Company H, June 4, 1895. While in the field during the Leadville strike, he was promoted to Captain, September 29, 1896. It was through his untiring efforts that the Boulder Armory, one of the finest armories in the State of Colorado, was erected. The building is now occupied by a new company that has the same letter. At the time of the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, Capt. Eastman, whose study of the law had for some time been unavoidably abandoned, was attending the University of Colorado, taking a course of law. He served through the Philippine campaign in the engagements on August 13, 1898, February 4th and 5, 1899, and subsequent skirmishes and outpost duty in which the Colorado Regiment was engaged.

CHARLES H. WILCOX, 1st Lieutenant, Company H, was born at Boulder, Col., March 12, 1872, where he attended the public schools, after which he attended the State University for two years; he is by occupation a teamster. He joined the National Guard of Colorado, as a private, February 2, 1893; was promoted to Corporal in 1894, and to Sergeant in 1896; served three months in the Leadville strike, and was commissioned 1st Lieutenant, September 29, 1896. He was commissioned 1st Lieutenant, U. S. V., May 1, 1898, and served through the Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection, and was mustered out September 8, 1899, at San Francisco, Cal.

H. J. LAWRENCE, 2d Lieutenant, Company H, was born in Louisville, Ky., October 11, 1872; was educated at the Michigan Military Academy, graduating in the class of 1890; entered the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., in 1892, resigning appointment as cadet in the spring of 1894.

He was appointed Acting Assistant Adjutant-General to Brigadier-General Irving Hale, September 7, 1898, and commissioned Captain, September 21, 1898. He was relieved as Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, 2d Brigade, 2d Division, 8th Army Corps, July 1, 1899, and assigned to command Company C, July 15, 1899, and continued in such command until muster-out, September 8, 1899.

RICE W. MEANS, 1st Lieutenant, Company C, was born in St. Joseph, Mo., on November 16, 1877, and moved to Denver, Colo., in 1888, receiving his education in the public schools of Denver. ADDITIONAL BIOGRAPHIES.

COMPANY D.

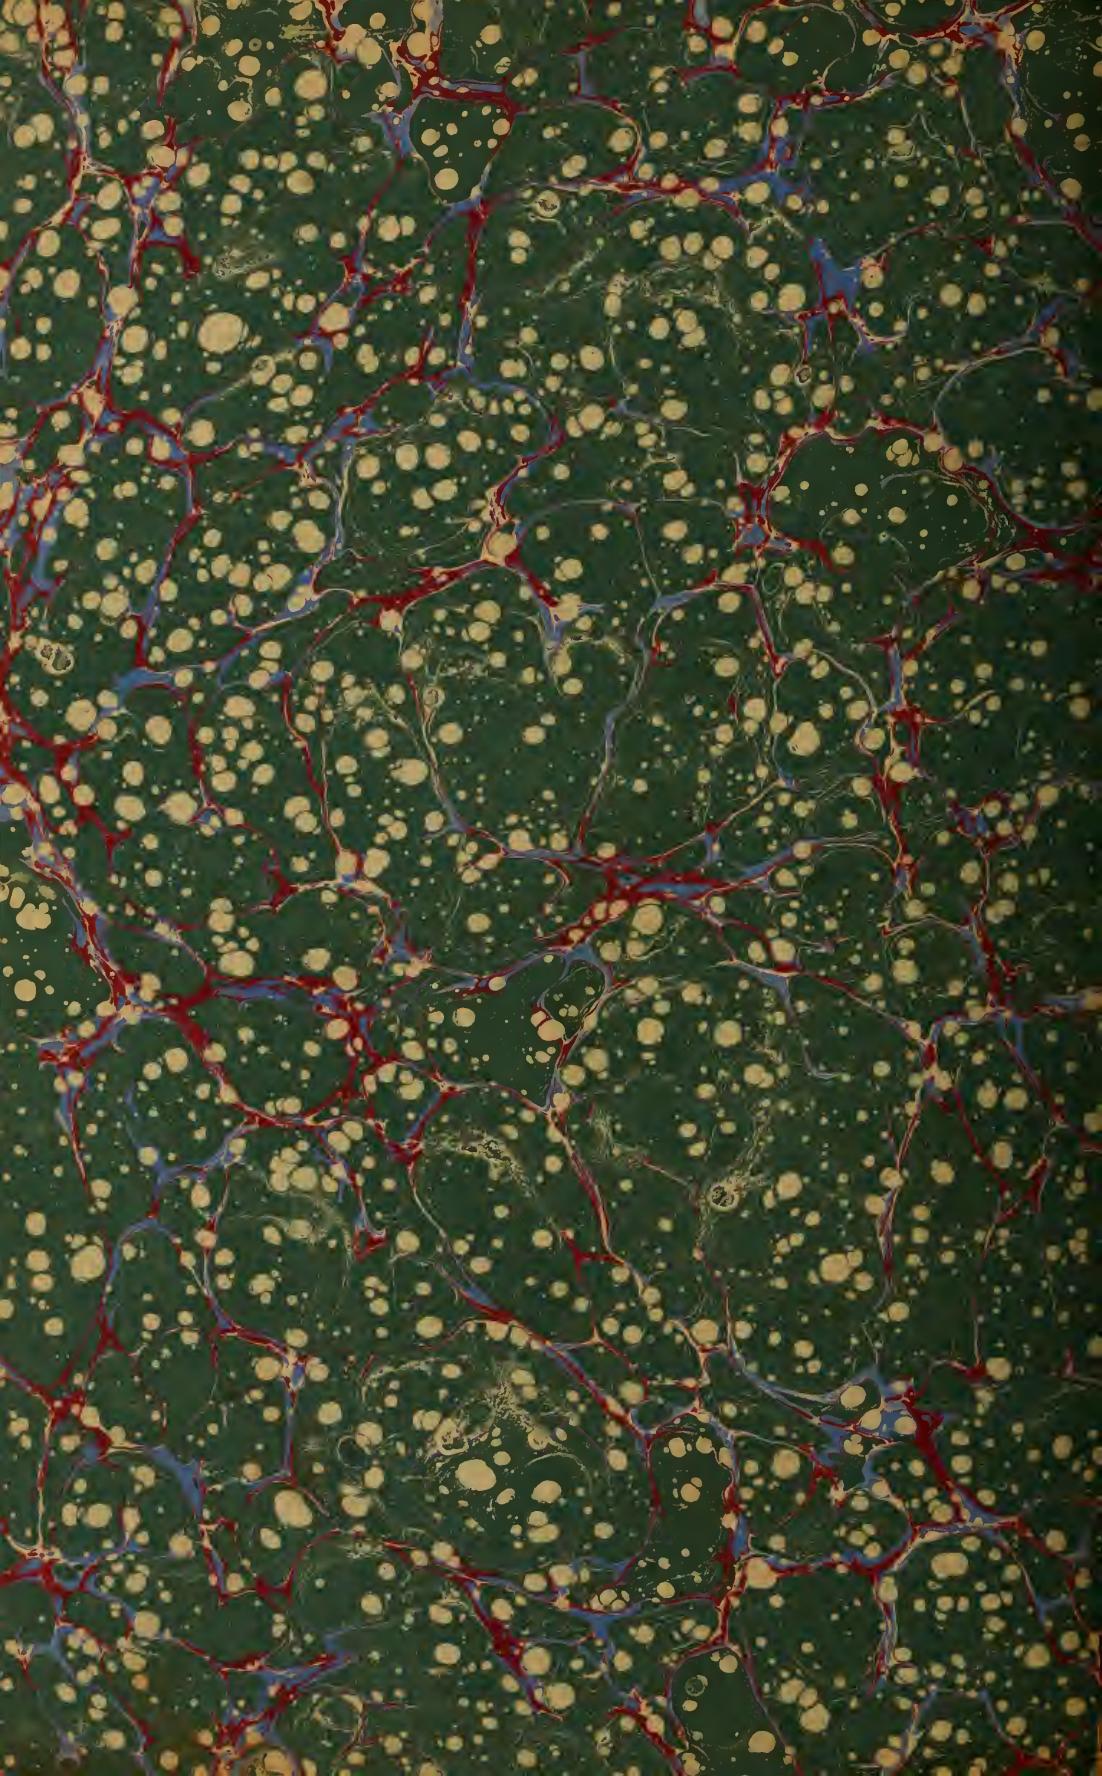

A. J. LUTHER, 1st Lieutenant, Company D, was born near Longmont, Col., February 23, 1874. He lived on a ranch until the spring of 1884, at which time he moved with his parents to Providence, R. I., residing there for thirteen months; afterward the family returned to Colorado, taking up their residence in Greeley. His father, Samuel O. Luther, a veteran of the Civil War, was appointed Deputy Sheriff and jailer of Weld County, and held that position up to the time of his death, June 20, 1894. Young Luther entered the Greeley Tribune office as apprentice May 1, 1891, holding that position until the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. November 25, 1895, Company D, 1st Regiment, National Guard of Colorado, was mustered in, Mr. Luther being one of the charter members, enlisting as a private. May 15, 1896, he was appointed 1st Sergeant from private, and served in this capacity throughout the Leadville riots, 1896-97, of five months duration, and up to the time he was mustered out, April 30, 1898. When the call for volunteers was made by President McKinley, Mr. Luther was one of the first to respond, and was enrolled and mustered into Company D. He served throughout the Spanish-American, and part of the Philippine Wars, having one of the best records in his regiment for not being sick up to the latter part of June, 1899, at which time he was ordered to the hospital with bowel trouble, and remained there for two weeks. He was promoted to 1st Lieutenant, June 11, 1899, receiving his notification while in the field before Las Pinas, near Manila, P. I. He was mustered out as such September 8, 1899.

COMPANY A.

SAMUEL E. THOMAS, 1st Lieutenant, Company A, was born in Camden, N. J., January 29, 1874. He was brought to Colorado when only a year old, where he has resided ever since. His father, J. J. Thomas, came to Colorado in 1858, and served through the Civil War in the 1st Colorado Cav. Lieut. Thomas joined the National Guard of Colorado in 1893, seeing service in the great labor and miners' riots of 1894 at Cripple Creek, and of 1896 at Leadville. At the breaking out of the war he was 1st Sergeant of Company B, 2d Regiment, National Guard of Colorado, and was one of the first to offer his services. He was mainly instrumental in getting up the present Company A, 1st Colorado. He was appointed 2d Lieutenant on his arrival at Denver, and served with distinction through the Spanish-American War. He was the first American wounded on the Island of Luzon, being wounded in the left hand on the morning of July 20, 1898. When the Filipino insurrection broke out on February 4, 1899, his company was one of the first on the line, and participated in all skirmishes and battles of the regiment. He was appointed 1st Lieutenant for meritorious conduct on July 15, 1899. He left Manila with the regiment, and was mustered out September 8, 1899, at San Francisco, Cal.

AUGUSTUS B. TEAL, 2d Lieutenant, Company A, was born December 5, 1865, at Port Jervis, New York; was educated in the public schools of that place, taking the academical course, and graduating in 1882; worked at hardware business from that time until 1889, when he came to Pueblo, Col., where he accepted a position as timekeeper in the master mechanic's office of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad; remained with that company a little over two years, when he resigned to accept a position as chief clerk of Contest Department in the United States Land Office, leaving there after two years to become Deputy County Treasurer of Pueblo County; served in that position for four years, leaving to accept a position as manager of the Southern Hotel at Pueblo, where he was still engaged when the war trouble arose; enlisted as private, April 16, 1898, in Company B, 2d Regiment of Colorado National Guard, which became Company A of the 1st Colorado Volunteers; went to Denver, April 29, 1898, with the company, and was mustered in as Quartermaster-Sergeant of Company A, May 1, 1898; was appointed 1st Sergeant, November 5, 1898, and held that position until July 14, 1899, when he was commissioned 2d Lieutenant, being assigned to his old company; returned to San Francisco with the regiment, and was mustered out, September 8, 1899.
